

THE GO BAG

TY

The Go Bag is our monthly gear review. We pick one or two items we've tested over the month and write a non-biased summary of how it performed.

Whether it's a volcano, wildfire, tsunami, earthquake, an unexpected extension of the statue of limitations, or the zombie apocalypse... when you've got to go, this gear will help you get through it.

1 Worried about differentiating yourself from the zombie masses while anticipating an airstrike? Don't want to be mistaken for an IED builder while changing a tire on your Hi-Lux? Then your Go Bag needs a Phoenix JR. 123 from Cejay Engineering LLC. Designed as an infrared Combat Identification Marker, it's not much larger than the CR123 battery that powers it. This 2" tall powerhouse has a range of up to 6 miles. The built-in spring clip allows for attachment to pack straps, hats, vehicles etc. When not in use, just insert the battery upside down and stow it. I have had mine clipped into my kit, along with a visible red "training" version for four months now. Luckily I have not needed to deploy one, but knowing they are quickly accessible adds a great level of comfort.

www.cejayeng.com

Review By: Eddie Killian, Director of Business Development and Technology at Khyber Interactive Associates. Founded in 1992, Khyber is a world-class emergency response training, research and consulting company recognized world-wide for delivering unparalleled tactical training services to Law Enforcement, Military, security and Private Sector clients.

www.khybertraining.com

2 Tentsile combines the comfort and versatility of a hammock with the usable space and security of a tent. The ultra portable structure uniquely employs tension forces to provide separation from wildlife, including insects, snakes and other predators but also from sand storms, earth tremors, cold or wet ground, debris or contamination. The Tentsile range offers unique sheltered accommodation in any environment. Ground conditions can limit the use of certain locations but now; whether you are looking for a more versatile camping solution or an urban garden treehouse that avoids planning restrictions, with Tentsile the sky really is the only limit. It also keep you out of zombie range (Walking Dead type Zombies, not the Carl Lewis-esk Zombies from 28 Day Later). It does however present you nicely as a packaged meal for a T-Rex and other large carnivores.

www.tentsile.com/

1

2

